U.S., REDS VERY FAR APART, DULLES SAYS

Talk of Coexistence Meaningless Now,
He Tells Mercer Law Day Meet

By HAL MUNCK

MACON, Ga., Oct. 28—Any talk at this time of coexistence between Russia and the United States is "meaningless," Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, said here Friday.

Mr. Dulles, brother of the Secretary of State, was in Macon for the observance of Mercer University's eight annual Law Day. His talk highlighted the afternoon program.

The man who should know what goes on behind the Iron Curtain if anyone does, Mr. Dulles said the basic philosophies of both countries are so far apart that the term coexistence is meaningless.

He added: "Short of revolution, any basic changes in a structure such as that of the Soviet Union can only come slowly. True, there have been some modest changes, but until in the Soviet Union a system is devised for the peoples' ultimate control over the decisions of the Politburo, we can't put much faith in their tactical moves."

MR. DULLES stated there will be "no lasting security and no basis for relaxing our vigilance for our defense as long as the present Soviet system remains."

Mr. Dulles came to Macon from Atlanta by automobile. He arrived in Atlanta from Washington by train Thursday morning and was met there by Judge Elbert Tuttle. The two drove to Macon together.

In the morning session of the Mercer program, E. Smythe Gambrell of Atlanta declared that "big, rich government" constitutes the greatest threat to freedom.

THE ATLANTA attorney, who is president of the American Bar Assn., spoke to an estimated 1,000 judges, lawyers and visitors at the morning sessions of the all-

He said that "too much government" is "a threat to a free electorate, to freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of criticism and a free ballot."

Sen. Walter F. George for whom the law school was named, occupied a seat on the visitors' platform during the afternoon.

IN HIS TALK, Mr. Gambrell said that citizens must have "access to information on public affairs that is accurate and adequate, if democracy is to be 'a real and living thing.'"

"For the welfare of society," he said, "we must achieve both a free press and a fair trial. Two great professions of law and journalism are now together in friendly conference for the purpose of arriving at some voluntary arrangement which will recognize the rights of all concerned, including the public, in the handling of publicity in relation to legal proceedings."

The notables and other visitors were treated to a barbecue at lunch.

Dean Hodge O'Neal, head of the George Law School, was official host for the event, which will close Friday evening with a banquet.

IN ADDITION to attorneys and judges present, a number of prominent military personages were on hand for the day-long observance of Law Day. Among them were Capt. James I. Cone of the Macon Naval Ordnance Plant; Col. H. R. Kenaston, staff judge-advocate of the 14th Air Force, and Col. William D. Smith, military instructor of Mercer University.

Friday also marked the 13th publication of the Mercer Law Review. The review is published twice yearly by the Georgia Law School, and is composed chiefly of a survey of legal developments within Georgia during the past year.

A highlight in the afternoon was the unveiling of a portrait of Andrew W. Lane, a graduate of Mercer University and former teacher. The portrait will hang in the moot courtroom of the law school.

ALSO DURING the day there was to be a pretrial demonstration presided over by Judge William A. Boodle of the U.S. District Court of the Middle District of Georgia, and a business meeting of the Mercer University Alumni Association.

Among invited guests are: Justices Bond Almand, T. S. Candler, Carlton Mobley and Lee B. Wyatt and Justices Emeritus R. C. Bell and C. W. Worrell, all of the Supreme Court of Georgia, and presiding Judge B. C. Gardner and Judge Joseph B. Quillian of the Georgia Court of Appeals.

Other out-of-town jurists who planned to attend are Judge A. M. (Bill) Anderson of Perry, Judge George R. Lilly of Quitman, Judge Sam F. Lowe Jr. of the Civil Court of Fulton County, Judge Luke Arnold of Atlanta and Ordinary C. H. Hollingsworth Jr. of Rome.

The Georgia Bar Assn. was represented by its president, Henry L. Bowden of Atlanta, and by a number of past presidents, including Charles J. Bloch, Hatton Lovejoy, A. Edward Smith, Robert B. Troutman and William C. Turpin.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and Frank H. Edwards, head of the state bill drafting unit, represented the State Law Department.
